

Are you guys kidding? Cell phones on planes? Travel is already a real hassle. I can just imagine airplanes going the way of rail transit. Have you been on a train lately? Every other person talking loudly and joking about the most mundane things.

I think that it is a really bad idea to lift this ban. I can just imagine the air rage when someone asks someone else to quiet down or to hang up. What about people trying to sleep?

I travel for work (2 times a year to China and several trip per year domestically. Please, please, please do not lift this ban.

I really don't get the FCC. You guys get involved in things that really should be of no concern to you and then make decisions that make no sense to the people that have to live with them. I challenge you to take a train from Boston to New York. You will see first hand of all the mindless chatter and self important chatter by the end of your trip. You will at that point come to your senses and keep the ban on cell phones in flight in effect.

-Oh yeah, aren't airplanes fly-by-wire? Why invite even the most remote possibility of wireless communication interfering with aircraft avionics systems?

Thanks for your serious consideration of this matter.

Sean Gayle